Link resolvers “fail nearly a third of the time”

Even when the link resolver does not fail, it requires multiple clicks to get to the full text

“A Tale of Two Discoveries”

Anita K. Foster & Jean B. MacDonald
Illinois State University

- “Participants in both studies stated that they expected to retrieve Full Text when a record indicated it was available.”
- “In the Summon study, when the participants saw a link resolver menu, it was unclear to them why they were seeing it instead of the Full Text. As William Wong et al. (2012) discovered, “Users abandon searching on library subscribed resources when this occurs too frequently and turn to freely available resources on the Internet” (39). This behavior was seen with the Summon participants. They often stated that they would turn to Google when they did not understand what had happened with their Summon search. The EDS study participants rarely mentioned wanting to use Google during the study scenarios.”

Excerpt from: “A Tale of Two Discoveries:
Comparing the Usability of Summon and EBSCO Discovery Service”
Journal of Web Librarianship, January 2013

Jisc findings in “Impact of Library Discovery Technologies”

- One library working with EDS had changed both its link resolver and its subscription agent from Swets to EBSCO to ensure a more efficient discovery and access management of its electronic resources. Indeed, libraries which had gone for a whole suite of products from one single vendor indicated that it was definitely an advantage for them to have one joined-up system allowing exchange of information between products in a streamlined and efficient way.
- “I attended a couple of webinars where they have explained in great detail how their relevancy ranking works and I’m satisfied that is all honest and above the board. They will give the richest records the top priority because it will have those elements in it.”
- (Regarding Summon) More than half of all survey respondents--32 out of 51--had identified gaps in the content offered

Case Study: EDS Increases Usage of a Top Publisher’s Journals

University of North Florida (USA) reported an increase in ScienceDirect usage of 247% due to the implementation of EDS (previous year only 11%)

Bournemouth University (UK) reported an increase in ScienceDirect link-outs of 547% over the previous year without EDS

Picking a WSD and Making It Yours

1. Know what you want to do with the service.
2. Pick the central index that aligns with your content and has the metadata to support discovery. Turn data sources on or off to focus the index for your users.
3. Pick a discovery layer that can surface the content your users want to find and that facilitates search behavior you want to promote.
